Rare Gases in the Air.

Samples of pure air from a height of eight and one-half miles have been collected by Teisserence de Fort, the French investigator, in his observations on the rare gases, especially argon, neon and hellum. The collecting apparatus-a vacuum tube drawn out to a fine point at one end-was carried up by a large sounding balloon. At the desired height an electromagnetic device operated by a barometer broke off the point admitting the air, and a few minutes later a second contact sent a battery current through a platinum wire around the broken end, melting the glass and sealing the tube. All samples thus obtained show argon and neon, no helium being found in air from above

But now the psychological moment has seemed to arrive for this great battle for temperance to sweep on to victory after years of hammering away at the legalized liquor traffic. In view of the examples of misery and degra-dation and want that it has produced. dation and want that it has produced, the wonder is that we have let it live as long as it has. A certain minister in a convention has stated that the nineteenth century has been asleep on on the temperance question and is just waking up, and another prominent pastor is authority for the statement that 75 per cent, of the church is asleep on the subject, excepting the ministers. There is a wonderful opportunity and a serious responsibility offered the church today upon this subject, and it is time to look for a response from the American conscience esponse from the American conscience on this subject, as it has responded upon other great moral questions.
